The Master of Arts Degree in Communication offers students the opportunity for advanced study in Communication. This program is grounded in the concept of Integrated Communication and encourages students' incorporation of research, discovery, critical thinking, and creative enterprise across traditional disciplinary boundaries. The faculty actively promote students' acquiring the knowledge and skills requisite for success in leadership, scholarship, and/or creative endeavors in business, public sector, and non-profit environments.

Admission
Prospective students must submit an application and fee to be considered for admission to UTSA's Graduate School. Admission is granted to students who have satisfied University-wide requirements, and as undergraduates completed at least 18 hours (12 upper-division) of coursework in Communication or a related field. Other admission requirements include submission of scores from the Graduate Record Examination (GRE) general test and two letters of recommendation from academic sources. Additionally, applicants must provide a statement of purpose, 500-750 words in length, describing their academic and other qualifications to be admitted to this program, areas of interest in the program, and goals related to pursuing the Master's degree in Communication. Applicants should specify which areas of study they plan to pursue and why.

Assistantships and Financial Support
A limited number of graduate teaching and research assistantships are available to qualified students enrolled in the program.

Application Deadlines
Applications are accepted for the fall semester only. The priority deadline for financial aid is March 31. Admission priority will be given to complete applications received by April 1. Admission deadline for international students is April 1. The final deadline for admission is July 1.
